

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF NEVADA

ESTATE OF FERNANDO SAUCEDA, by and through its Special Administrator, Irene Sauceda; IRENE SAUCEDA, individually, and as natural parent and guardian of
FERNANDO SAUCEDA, a minor;
SEBASTIAN SAUCEDA, a minor; and GIOVANNA SAUCEDA, a minor.

Case No.: 2:11-cv-02116-GMN-NJK

ORDER

Plaintiffs,

VS.)

CITY OF NORTH LAS VEGAS, a corporate city of the State of Nevada; NORTH LAS VEGAS POLICE DEPARTMENT, an entity of the CITY OF NORTH LAS VEGAS; OFFICER JEFFREY POLLARD; DOE POLICE OFFICERS I through XX, inclusive, individually and in their official capacity; DOES XXI through XXX, inclusive; ROES XXXI through XL, inclusive, Defendants.

Pending before the Court is the Motion to Reconsider (ECF No. 112) filed by the Estate of Fernando Saucedo, Irene Saucedo, and their minor children (collectively “Plaintiffs”), seeking partial reconsideration of an Order (ECF No. 107) entered by District Judge Andrew P. Gordon. In that Order, Judge Gordon granted in part and denied in part a Motion for Summary Judgment (ECF No. 101) filed by the City of North Las Vegas, the North Las Vegas Police Department (“NLVPD”) and Officer Jeffrey Pollard (collectively “Defendants”), finding in favor of Defendants on some claims and withholding judgment on others pending supplemental briefing. Before the Court are also the two supplemental briefs (ECF Nos. 113 and 114)

1 ordered by Judge Gordon on the claims from which he withheld judgment. Defendants did not 2 file a Response to the Motion to Reconsider.

3 For the reasons addressed below, the Court denies Plaintiffs' Motion to Reconsider and,
4 after reviewing the supplemental briefs, denies summary judgment on the remaining claims 5 challenged in the Motion for Summary Judgment.

6 I. BACKGROUND

7 This case arises out of an officer-involved shooting at the home of Plaintiffs in North 8 Las Vegas soon after midnight on January 1, 2011. A more complete description of the events
9 can be found in Judge Gordon's Order and will not be fully repeated here. See (Order 1:15– 10 3:25, ECF No. 107). However, a summary of the key facts for this order are as follows.

11 On the night of the incident, Plaintiffs and several other individuals were at Plaintiffs' 12 home celebrating New Year's Eve. (Id. 1:15– 2:19). Officer Pollard and another special 13 operations officer of NLVPD, Michael Harris, were patrolling the neighborhood around 14 Plaintiffs' home in Officer Harris's unmarked pickup truck. (Id. 2:1–2). The officers were 15 wearing the NLVPD special operations uniform, consisting of an olive green fatigue-style shirt 16 with subdued-colored NLVPD insignia patches on each arm, olive green fatigue-style pants, 17 and a duty belt. (Id. 2:2–5). Before and after driving past Plaintiffs' residence, the officers 18 heard gunfire from somewhere in the surrounding area, and while driving past the residence 19 they observed one individual holding what the officers believed was a rifle.¹ (Id. 2:8–13).

20 The officers informed dispatch they were responding to gun fire. (Id. 2:15–16). They 21 then exited the truck several houses down from Plaintiffs' residence, un-holstered their guns, 22 and approached Plaintiffs' residence on foot without activating their handgun-mounted 23 flashlights or announcing their presence. (Id. 2:15–19). Someone standing in the driveway of 24

25 ¹ Some residents in North Las Vegas celebrate New Year's Eve by shooting firearms into the air at midnight, which is a misdemeanor crime when done inside the city limits. (Order 1:21–22, ECF No. 107).

1 Plaintiffs' residence noticed the officers as they approached and asked who they were. (Id.
2 2:20–21). At that point, the officers activated their flashlights and rushed onto the property.
3 (Id. 2:21–22). The officers also claim that they identified themselves as police, but the other 4 witnesses testified that the officers did not identify themselves and that in their camouflage 5 uniforms, they did not recognize the officers as police. (Id. 2:21–26).

6 While Officer Harris approached several individuals standing in the driveway, Officer
7 Pollard pursued other individuals who had run toward the residence. (Id. 3:1–7). The residence 8 includes a porch that is enclosed with a tarp, except for an opening that allowed for ingress and 9 egress through the front door. (Id. 3:8–9). Chasing the runners, Officer Pollard ran up to the 10 porch and pulled back the tarp, looking into the porch. (Id. 3:9–10). At this point, Officer 11 Pollard noticed movement to his left and turned to find Fernando Saucedo (“Sauceda”) pointing 12 a gun at his face. (Id. 3:11–13). Officer Pollard responded to this threat by holding down 13 Saucedo’s right arm and firing twelves shots. (Id. 3:12–14). Officer Pollard’s shots hit Saucedo 14 nine times—five in the front and four in the back—and he died soon after while attempting to 15 flee from Officer Pollard. (Id. 3:14–21).

16 Plaintiffs subsequently filed their lawsuit, alleging six causes of action arising from the 17 shooting: (1) Fourth Amendment violation due to use of excessive force; (2) § 1983 municipal 18 liability; (3) intentional or negligent infliction of emotional stress; (4) assault and battery; (5) 19 negligence; and (6) negligent supervision and training. (Complaint, ECF No. 1). Defendants 20 filed a Motion for Summary Judgment on all claims, and in his Order on the motion, Judge 21 Gordon found in favor of Defendants on Plaintiffs’ municipal liability and negligent 22 supervision and training claims but withheld judgment on Plaintiffs’ Fourth Amendment 23 excessive force claim and the three other state law claims. (Order 19:21–20:8, ECF No. 107).
24 Judge Gordon also found that the actual shooting of Saucedo was not excessive force, but he 25 ordered supplemental briefing on the issue of whether Officer Pollard’s conduct in provoking

1 the shooting constituted an independent constitutional violation sufficient for the four 2 remaining claims to survive summary judgment. (Id. 8:7–10:22, 16:1–18:3, 19:21–20:8).

3 Following entry of the Order, Plaintiffs filed their Motion to Reconsider and both parties 4 filed their respective supplemental briefs. Judge Gordon then recused himself from the case, 5 and it was resigned to this Court.

6 II. LEGAL STANDARD

7 A. Motion to Reconsider Standard

8 A motion to reconsider a final appealable order is appropriately brought under either 9 Rule 59(e) or Rule 60(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Fuller v. M.G. Jewelry, 950
 10 F.2d 1437, 1442 (9th Cir. 1991); see also United States v. Martin, 226 F.3d 1042, 1048, n.8
 11 (9th Cir. 2000). When a motion to reconsider is timely filed within the 28-day period specified 12 under the statute, it is treated as a Rule 59(e) motion. See Am. Ironworkers & Erectors Inc. v.
 13 N. Am. Constr. Corp., 248 F.3d 892, 899 (9th Cir. 2001).

14 Motions for reconsideration under Rule 59(e) are committed to the discretion of the trial 15 court. See School Dist. No. 1J. Multnomah County v. ACandS, Inc., 5 F.3d 1255, 1262 (9th Cir.
 16 1993). However, absent highly unusual circumstances, a district court should not grant a 17 motion for reconsideration under Rule 59(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure unless the 18 court “(1) is presented with newly discovered evidence, (2) committed clear error or the initial 19 decision was manifestly unjust, or (3) if there is an intervening change in controlling law.” Id.
 20 at 1263; see also Allstate Ins. v. Herron, 634 F.3d 1101, 1111 (9th Cir. 2011). Furthermore, 21 although the court enjoys discretion in granting or denying a motion under this rule, “amending 22 a judgment after its entry remains an extraordinary remedy which should be used sparingly.”
 23 Herron, 634 F.3d at 1111 (quoting McDowell v. Calderon, 197 F.3d 1253, 1255 n.1 (9th Cir.
 24 1999)) (internal quotations omitted).

1 B. Motion for Summary Judgment Standard

2 The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provide for summary adjudication when the 3 pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the 4 affidavits, if any, show that “there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant 5 is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). Material facts are those that 6 may affect the outcome of the case. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248
7 (1986). A dispute as to a material fact is genuine if there is sufficient evidence for a reasonable 8 jury to return a verdict for the nonmoving party. See id. “Summary judgment is inappropriate if 9 reasonable jurors, drawing all inferences in favor of the nonmoving party, could return a verdict 10 in the nonmoving party’s favor.” Diaz v. Eagle Produce Ltd. P’ship, 521 F.3d 1201, 1207 (9th 11 Cir. 2008) (citing United States v. Shumway, 199 F.3d 1093, 1103–04 (9th Cir. 1999)). A 12 principal purpose of summary judgment is “to isolate and dispose of factually unsupported 13 claims.” Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323–24 (1986).

14 In determining summary judgment, a court applies a burden-shifting analysis. “When 15 the party moving for summary judgment would bear the burden of proof at trial, it must come 16 forward with evidence which would entitle it to a directed verdict if the evidence went 17 uncontested at trial. In such a case, the moving party has the initial burden of establishing 18 the absence of a genuine issue of fact on each issue material to its case.” *C.A.R. Transp.
Brokerage Co. v. Darden Rests., Inc.*, 213 F.3d 474, 480 (9th Cir. 2000) (citations omitted). In 19 contrast, when the nonmoving party bears the burden of proving the claim or defense, the 20 moving party can meet its burden in two ways: (1) by presenting evidence to negate an 21 essential element of the nonmoving party’s case; or (2) by demonstrating that the nonmoving 22 party failed to make a showing sufficient to establish an element essential to that party’s case
23 on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. See Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 323–
24. If the moving party fails to meet its initial burden, summary judgment must be denied and

1 the court need not consider the nonmoving party's evidence. See Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 2 398 U.S. 144, 159–60 (1970).

3 If the moving party satisfies its initial burden, the burden then shifts to the opposing 4 party to establish that a genuine issue of material fact exists. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v.
5 Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586 (1986). To establish the existence of a factual dispute, 6 the opposing party need not establish a material issue of fact conclusively in its favor. It is 7 sufficient that “the claimed factual dispute be shown to require a jury or judge to resolve the 8 parties’ differing versions of the truth at trial.” T.W. Elec. Serv., Inc. v. Pac. Elec. Contractors Ass ’n, 809 F.2d 626, 631 (9th Cir. 1987). In other words, the nonmoving party cannot avoid 9 summary judgment by relying solely on conclusory allegations that are unsupported by factual 10 data. See Taylor v. List, 880 F.2d 1040, 1045 (9th Cir. 1989). Instead, the opposition must go 11 beyond the assertions and allegations of the pleadings and set forth specific facts by producing 12 competent evidence that shows a genuine issue for trial. See Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 324.

13 At summary judgment, a court’s function is not to weigh the evidence and determine the 14 truth but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial. See Anderson, 477 U.S. at 249.
15 The evidence of the nonmovant is “to be believed, and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn 16 in his favor.” Id. at 255. But if the evidence of the nonmoving party is merely colorable or is 17 not significantly probative, summary judgment may be granted. See id. at 249–50.

18 III. DISCUSSION

19 There are two issues currently before the Court. The first issue—as presented in the 20 Motion to Reconsider—is whether this Court should alter Judge Gordon’s finding that Officer 21 Pollard’s shooting of Sauceda itself was not excessive force. (Mot. to Reconsider 3:14–20, ECF 22 No. 112). The second issue—which has now been briefed by the parties—is whether 23 Defendants are entitled to summary judgment on the remaining claims from which Judge 24

1 Gordon withheld judgment when he entered his order on the Motion for Summary Judgment.
2 See (Pls' Supp. Brief, ECF No. 113; Defs' Supp. Brief, ECF No. 114).

3 A. Motion to Reconsider

4 Regarding the Motion to Reconsider, that motion is denied for two reasons. First, as 5 Plaintiffs themselves acknowledge, their motion is premature. (Mot. to Reconsider 3:13–14, 6 ECF No. 112). Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 59(e) and 60(b) only allow the reconsideration 7 of “final judgments and appealable interlocutory orders.” Motorola, Inc. v. J.B. Rodgers Mech.
8 Contractors, 215 F.R.D. 581, 583 n.1 (D. Ariz. 2003) (citing Balla v. Idaho State Bd. of 9 Corrections, 869 F.2d 461, 466–67 (9th Cir. 1989)); see also Martin, 226 F.3d at 1048 n.8 10 (“Rule 60(b), like Rule 59(e), applies only to motions attacking final, appealable orders . . .”).
11 Judge Gordon’s Order, however, is not a final judgment or an appealable interlocutory order 12 because it did not “end[] the litigation on the merits and leave[] nothing for the court to do but 13 execute the judgment.” Catlin v. United States, 324 U.S. 229, 233 (1945). Moreover, the 14 specific issue sought to be reconsidered relates to the excessive force claim which was 15 expressly left unresolved by Judge Gordon’s Order when he withheld judgement concerning 16 whether Plaintiffs’ claim survives under a provocation theory. Accordingly, Plaintiffs motion 17 must be denied for being filed before final judgment was entered.

18 Second, even if Plaintiffs’ motion was not premature, Plaintiffs fail to demonstrate any 19 of the causes justifying reconsideration under Rule 59(e). Plaintiffs make no showing of new 20 evidence, clear error, or change in the controlling law, and instead merely insist that the Court 21 should withhold judgment on whether the shooting itself could constitute excessive force until 22 it considers the arguments contained in their Supplemental Brief. (Mot. to Reconsider 3:14–20, 23 ECF No. 112). This argument, however, does not justify granting a motion for reconsideration.
24 See School Dist. No. 1J. Multnomah County, 5 F.3d at 1263 (A district court should not grant a 25 motion for reconsideration under Rule 59(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure unless the

1 court “(1) is presented with newly discovered evidence, (2) committed clear error or the initial 2 decision was manifestly unjust, or (3) if there is an intervening change in controlling law.”).
3 Accordingly, Plaintiffs’ have failed to show that the “extraordinary remedy” of reconsideration 4 is appropriate in this case, and Plaintiffs’ Motion for Reconsideration is denied.

5 B. Summary Judgment Motion on Remaining Claims

6 In his Order, Judge Gordon withheld judgment on Plaintiffs’ excessive force claim under 7 a provocation theory as well as Plaintiffs’ related state law claims for intentional or negligent
8 infliction of emotional distress, assault and battery, and negligence. Judge Gordon explained 9 that if, in taking the facts in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, Officer Pollard’s conduct 10 leading up to the shooting constituted a separate violation of constitutional rights, then 11 Defendants’ request for summary judgment on these claims must be denied. See (Order 8:7– 12 10:22, ECF No. 107). Specifically, Judge Gordon requested additional briefing on whether 13 Officer Pollard’s warrantless search of the covered porch with his gun drawn and without 14 announcing himself as an officer constituted a constitutional violation that provoked the deadly 15 confrontation. (Id.); see also Sheehan v. City & Cnty. of S.F., 743 F.3d 1211, 1216 (9th Cir.)
16 cert. granted sub nom. City & Cnty. of S.F., Cal. v. Sheehan, 135 S. Ct. 702 (2014) (“Officers 17 may be held liable for an otherwise lawful defensive use of deadly force when they 18 intentionally or recklessly provoke a violent confrontation by actions that rise to the level of an 19 independent Fourth Amendment violation.”). Having reviewed the parties’ supplemental briefs
20 on this issue, the Court finds that there is at least a genuine issue of material facts concerning 21 whether Officer Pollard’s actions leading up to the shooting constituted a constitutional 22 violation. Therefore, Defendant are denied summary judgment on the remaining claims.

23 To establish liability for the shooting under a provocation theory, Plaintiffs must show 24 (1) Pollard’s conduct leading up to the confrontation recklessly or intentionally provoked the 25 confrontation, and (2) Pollard’s reckless or intentional conduct constituted an independent

1 Fourth Amendment violation. Burns v. City of Redwood City, 737 F. Supp. 2d 1047, 1062
 2 (N.D. Cal. 2010); see also Espinosa v. City & Cnty. of S.F., 598 F.3d 528, 538–39 (9th Cir.
 3 2010). As Judge Gordon explained:

4 There is no evidence Pollard intentionally provoked the confrontation with 5 Saucedo. But viewing all reasonable disputes of fact in plaintiffs’ favor, there is a 6 triable issue as to whether Pollard’s warrantless entry onto the covered porch, 7 with his gun drawn, was reckless. The officers were responding to misdemeanor
 8 celebratory gunfire, and Pollard admits that when he approached Saucedo’s home 9 he did not see any weapons and he did not otherwise feel threatened. In the dark, 10 Pollard’s fatigue-style uniform did not readily identify him as a police officer, 11 and the officers were driving an unmarked pickup truck. Viewing witness 12 testimony in plaintiffs’ favor, Pollard drew his weapon, chased after people, 13 entered Saucedo’s covered porch without a warrant and without announcing 14 himself as a police officer, and pointed his weapon at people. A reasonable jury 15 could find Pollard acted recklessly.

16 (Order 9:5–14, ECF No. 107) (citations omitted). Accordingly, the question remaining to be 17 resolved is whether these actions also constituted a Fourth Amendment violation.

18 The Fourth Amendment, made applicable to the States through the Fourteenth 19 Amendment, Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643 (1961), protects “[t]he right of the people to be 20 secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, 21” U.S. Const. amend. IV. As the Ninth Circuit has explained, “searches and seizures inside 22 a home without a warrant are presumptively unreasonable.” United States v. Martinez, 406 F.3d 23 1160, 1163 (9th Cir. 2005). Furthermore, this presumption extends beyond the house to 24 include the area immediately surrounding the dwelling, traditionally known as the “curtilage.”
 25 United States v. Dunn, 480 U.S. 294, 300–01 (1987).² However, the presumption is not 26 irrebuttable, and there are two general exceptions to the warrant requirement for home 27 searches: exigency and emergency. Hopkins v. Bonvicino, 573 F.3d 752, 763 (9th Cir. 2009).

26
 27 ² The parties do not dispute that the covered porch constituted the curtilage of the Saucedo residence. See also Florida v. Jardines, 133 S. Ct. 1409, 1415 (2013) (“The front porch is the classic exemplar of an area adjacent to the home and to which the activity of home life extends.”).

1 “The emergency exception stems from the police officers’ community caretaking function and 2 allows them to respond to emergency situations that threaten life or limb; this exception does 3 not derive from police officers function as criminal investigators.” Id. (quoting United States v.
4 Cervantes, 219 F.3d 882, 889 (9th Cir. 2000)). “By contrast, the exigency exception does 5 derive from the police officers’ investigatory function; it allows them to enter a home without a 6 warrant if they have both probable cause to believe that a crime has been or is being committed 7 and a reasonable belief that their entry is necessary to prevent the destruction of relevant 8 evidence, the escape of the suspect, or some other consequence improperly frustrating 9 legitimate law enforcement efforts.” Id. (quoting United States v. McConney, 728 F.2d 1195, 10 1199 (9th Cir. 1984) (en banc)). However, Defendants have failed to show that either 11 exception applies.

12 1. Emergency Exception

13 For the emergency exception to apply, Defendants must show: “(1) considering the 14 totality of the circumstances, law enforcement had an objectively reasonable basis for 15 concluding that there was an immediate need to protect others or themselves from serious 16 harm; and (2) the search’s scope and manner were reasonable to meet the need.” United States 17 v. Snipe, 515 F.3d 947, 952 (9th Cir. 2008) (replacing the old three-part test from Cervantes in 18 light of the Supreme Court’s decision in Brigham City v. Stuart, 547 U.S. 398 (2006) that an 19 officer’s subjective motivation is irrelevant). Viewing the facts in a light most favorable to 20 Plaintiffs, the officers had an objectively reasonable basis for concluding that there was an 21 immediate need to protect others from harm. The officers heard gunshots coming from the 22 immediate area around the Suaceda residence and believed that they might have seen a rifle 23 when driving past the home. Accordingly, while the officers were aware that the gunfire was 24 most likely celebratory, the dangerous nature of any kind of gunfire as well as the potential of a 25 more serious crime, gave the officers a reasonable basis for believing that there was a need to

1 protect others from serious harm. See United States v. Russell, 436 F.3d 1086, 1090 (9th Cir.
2 2006) (finding that it was reasonable for officers to believe there was an emergency when 3 responding to a 911 call regarding a gunshot injury); United States v. Coughlin, 202 F. App'x 4 194, 195 (9th Cir. 2006) ("[S]ince the bus was the location of the reported gunshot, it was 5 reasonable to associate the bus with the emergency.").

6 However, Defendants have failed to show as a matter of law that the manner of the 7 officers' search in this case was reasonable to meet the need. Rather than approach the 8 residence in calm manner, announcing their presence while attempting to ascertain whether 9 there was an emergency, the officers in this case stealthily approached the area and upon being 10 asked to identify themselves, instead rushed onto the property with their guns drawn and—11 without identifying themselves as police—began chasing individuals who fled from them.
12 Furthermore, while the officers thought they had seen a rifle when initially driving past the 13 residence, they admitted that while approaching on foot they did not see any firearms. Under 14 these facts, a jury could find that the scope and manner of the officers' search was 15 unreasonable. Compare Alexander v. City and County of San Francisco, 29 F.3d 1355 (9th Cir.
16 1994) (finding a search to be unreasonable where officers, "storming" into the home of a man 17 known to be "a mentally ill, elderly, half-blind recluse who threatened to shoot anybody who 18 entered," shot and killed the man when he pointed and tried to fire a handgun at the entering 19 officers) with Duran v. City of Maywood, 221 F.3d 1127 (9th Cir. 2000) (finding plaintiffs were 20 not entitled to an "Alexander instruction" on an unreasonable search causing a shooting when 21 the officers responding to a shots fired call arrived at a home in marked police cars wearing 22 police uniforms, walked up the driveway of the home with their guns drawn, and then shot and 23 killed a man who pointed a gun at them and ignored their command to drop the weapon); see also Espinosa v. City & Cnty. of San Francisco, 598 F.3d 528, 534–39 (9th Cir. 2010) 24 (affirming the district court's finding of genuine issues of fact regarding whether the officers

1 intentionally or recklessly provoked a confrontation where the officers—responding to a call 2 about an open door at a suspected drug house—entered the residence, observed a bloody shirt 3 on the first floor, and upon hearing noise in the attic, climbed into the attic and shot an unarmed 4 man because they believed he had a gun).

5 2. Exigency Exception

6 For the exigency exception to apply, Defendants must show: (1) the officers had 7 probable cause to search the house and (2) the exigent circumstances justified the warrantless 8 intrusion. Hopkins, 573 F.3d at 766–67. “A police officer has probable cause to conduct a 9 search when the facts available to him would warrant a person of reasonable caution in the 10 belief that contraband or evidence of a crime is present.” Florida v. Harris, 133 S. Ct. 1050, 11 1055 (2013). Exigent circumstances include “the destruction of relevant evidence, the escape 12 of the suspect, or some other consequence improperly frustrating legitimate law enforcement 13 efforts.” Hopkins, 573 F.3d at 763. Furthermore, “a search under this exception must be 14 limited in scope so that it is ‘strictly circumscribed by the exigencies which justify its 15 initiation.’” United States v. Camou, 773 F.3d 932, 940 (9th Cir. 2014) (quoting Mincey v.
16 Arizona, 437 U.S. 385, 393 (1978)); see also United States v. Reyes-Bosque, 596 F.3d 1017, 17 1029 (9th Cir. 2010) (“In order to prove that the exigent circumstances doctrine justified a 18 warrantless search, the government must [also] show that . . . the search’s scope and manner 19 were reasonable to meet the need.”).

20 Again viewing the facts in a light most favorable to Plaintiffs, the officers had probable 21 cause to believe that a crime had been or was being committed because they heard gunshots 22 coming from the immediate area around the Suaceda residence and believed that they might 23 have seen a rifle when driving past the home. However, Defendants have failed to show any 24 exigent circumstance existed to justify the manner of their warrantless search. The officers 25 were not in pursuit of a fleeing suspect as they approached the house, and there is nothing

1 indicating that the officers' stealth approach and storming of the residence was justified in 2 order to prevent the destruction of evidence, to protect themselves or others, or to effect some 3 other legitimate law enforcement effort. At the time of their approach, the officers did not see 4 any weapons or hear any gunshots, so they had no reason to believe that a quick rush of the 5 residence was necessary to protect themselves or others. Indeed, it was because of the manner 6 of their search that the officers put their lives and the lives of others in danger by creating a 7 chaotic and panicked situation in an area where they believed firearms to be located.
8 Therefore, a jury could find that the manner of their search was unreasonable and not justified 9 by exigent circumstances. Accordingly, there is at least a triable issue of fact concerning 10 whether the officers' warrantless intrusion into the Sauceda residence was a violation of 11 Plaintiffs' Fourth Amendment rights.

12 3. Qualified Immunity

13 Defendants have also argued in their brief that even if triable issues of fact exist 14 concerning whether Officer Pollard's actions amounted to a constitutional violation, they are 15 still entitled to summary judgment under a qualified immunity defense. (Defs' Supp. Brief 16 21:22–27:3, ECF No. 114).

17 Determining whether a law enforcement officer is entitled to qualified immunity 18 involves a two-step analysis. Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 201 (2001). In the first step, the 19 Court must view the record in the light most favorable to the party asserting injury in 20 determining whether the officer's conduct violated a constitutional right. Moreno v. Baca, 431
21 F.3d 633, 638 (9th Cir. 2005). If the plaintiff establishes the violation of a constitutional right, 22 the Court next considers whether that right was clearly established at the time the alleged 23 violation occurred. Id. To be clearly established, “[t]he contours of the right must have been 24 clear enough that a reasonable officer would have understood that what he or she was doing 25 violated that right.” Id. (citing Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 644 (1987)). Additionally,

1 in asserting a qualified immunity defense at the summary judgment stage, the defendant bears 2 the burden of showing that no genuine issues of material fact exist and that he is entitled to the 3 defense. See id. (“[T]he moving defendant bears the burden of proof on the issue of qualified 4 immunity . . .”).

5 Defendants do not dispute that at the time of their search, it was clearly established that 6 an officer cannot conduct a warrantless search of an individual’s front porch unless an exigency 7 or emergency exception applies. See United States v. Struckman, 603 F.3d 731, 738 (9th Cir.
 8 2010) (discussing what constitutes constitutionally protected curtilage to a home and stating 9 that warrantless search of a home is presumptively unreasonable). Instead, Defendants argue at 10 step two of the qualified immunity analysis that Officer Pollard could have reasonably believed 11 that his search was justified under the exigency exception of hot pursuit of suspected criminals.
 12 (Defs’ Supp. Brief 21:22–27:3, ECF No. 114). The Court disagrees.

13 As previously discussed, one of the exigent circumstances justifying a warrantless 14 search is to prevent the escape of a suspect. See Hopkins, 573 F.3d at 763. A closely related 15 exigent circumstance applies when an officer is in “hot pursuit” of a fleeing suspect. See 16 Kentucky v. King, 131 S. Ct. 1849, 1856 (2011) (“This Court has identified several exigencies 17 that may justify a warrantless search of a home[, including] when [police officers] are in hot 18 pursuit of a fleeing suspect.”); Struckman, 603 F.3d at 743 (“The exigent circumstances 19 exception is premised on ‘few in number and carefully delineated’ circumstances[, including] 20 the hot pursuit of a fleeing suspect . . .”) (citations omitted); see also United States v. George, 21 883 F.2d 1407, 1415 n.5 (9th Cir. 1989) (expressing skepticism that the hot pursuit doctrine is a 22 separate exception from the general exigency exception). The hot pursuit exception to the 23 warrant requirement applies when officers are in “immediate” and “continuous” pursuit of a 24 suspect from the scene of the crime. United States v. Johnson, 256 F.3d 895, 907 (9th Cir.
 25 2001) (en banc). However, as with other exigent circumstances, a hot pursuit search’s scope

1 and manner must also be reasonable in light of the circumstances. See Camou, 773 F.3d at 940
 2 (stating that a warrantless search based on exigent circumstances must be strictly circumscribed 3 by the circumstances to be reasonable); Reyes-Bosque, 596 F.3d at 1029 (same).

4 Prior to Officer Pollard's search, the Ninth Circuit held that a misdemeanor offense
 5 "rarely, if ever," would justify a warrantless entry into a home. See Hopkins, 573 F.3d at 769
 6 (rejecting a qualified immunity argument where officers broke into the home of a DUI suspect 7 without a warrant or probable cause); see also Robinson v. Solano Cnty., 278 F.3d 1007, 1013– 8 15 (9th Cir. 2002) (finding use of guns and handcuffs to detain a suspect unreasonable because 9 "the crime under investigation was at most a misdemeanor [and] the suspect was apparently 10 unarmed and approaching the officers in a peaceful way"); Johnson, 256 F.3d at 908 n.6 11 (stating that "where an officer is truly in hot pursuit and the underlying offense is a felony, the 12 Fourth Amendment usually yields . . . [but] in situations where the underlying offense is only a 13 misdemeanor, law enforcement must yield to the Fourth Amendment in all but the 'rarest' 14 cases.") (quoting Welsh v. Wisconsin, 466 U.S. 740, 753 (1984)). While stopping short of 15 creating a categorical rule that a warrantless search of a home in an effort to apprehend an 16 individual suspected of a misdemeanor offense is always unconstitutional, the Ninth Circuit 17 does make clear that absent some rare exigent circumstances, such a search would be a 18 violation of the Fourth Amendment. Here, Officer Pollard was chasing individuals he believed 19 may have committed the misdemeanor offense of discharging firearms within city limits.
 20 Accordingly, it was clearly established at the time of his pursuit that his actions would only be 21 constitutional in the case of rare exigent circumstances.

22 Defendants' argument in favor of qualified immunity relies almost entirely on the 23 Supreme Court's recent holding in Stanton v. Sims, 134 S. Ct. 3 (2013). In that case, the court 24 reversed the Ninth Circuit's denial of a qualified immunity defense when an officer pursued a 25 suspected misdemeanant into an enclosed front yard and found that the officer was entitled to 1 qualified immunity because the law regarding warrantless entry while in hot pursuit of a 2 misdemeanor was not clearly established. Id. at 7.³ The officer's actions in Stanton, however,

 3 are significantly more reasonable than and readily distinguishable from Officer Pollard's 4 actions here. In Stanton, two officers, responding to a call about an "unknown disturbance" 5 involving a person with a baseball bat, arrived at the scene in a marked police car wearing 6 police uniforms. Id. at 3. Upon seeing the officers, a man quickly crossed the street in front of 7 them, ignored the officers' yells of "police" and orders to stop, and quickly entered a gated yard 8 that was later revealed to be owned by another individual. Id. Seeing this suspicious behavior, 9 believing the suspect could be dangerous, and having witnessed the suspect at least commit the 10 misdemeanor offense of disobeying an order to stop, one of the officers kicked open the gate, 11 resulting in an injury to the innocent owner of the property. Id.

12 Unlike the officer in Stanton, however, Officer Pollard—when viewing the facts in a 13 light most favorable to Plaintiffs—did not actually witness a crime, was not wearing an 14 identifiable uniform, did not arrive in a marked police car, and did not identify himself as an 15 officer. Moreover, instead of merely kicking open a gate, Officer Pollard quietly approached 16 and then, when asked to identify himself, suddenly charged onto private property late at night 17 with his gun drawn and began chasing several fleeing individuals onto a covered porch. Given 18 the unreasonableness of these actions, even if the exigent circumstances here—namely, 19 suspecting that some of the pursued individuals may have previously committed the 20 misdemeanor of discharging a firearm and might escape arrest—fell within those "rarest cases" 21 where the pursuit was constitutional, the Court finds that no officer could have reasonably 22 believed that the manner in which Officer Pollard acted immediately prior to and during the 23 pursuit was constitutional. Cf. King, 131 S. Ct. at 1858 ("[T]he exigent circumstances rule

24

25 ³ The Supreme Court also expressly declined to clarify the law regarding the warrantless pursuit of a misdemeanor onto private property despite noting a split among federal and state courts on the issue. Stanton, 134 S. Ct. at 7.

1 justifies a warrantless search when the conduct of the police preceding the exigency is 2 reasonable in the same sense.”).⁴ The officers could not have reasonably relied on the exigency 3 of pursuing the fleeing suspects in order to justify their otherwise unconstitutional search when 4 that exigency was itself created by their own unreasonable actions in stealthily approaching and 5 rushing onto the Saucedas’ property with guns drawn and without identifying themselves. See 6 id. at 1857–58 (discussing how police cannot act unreasonably and thereby create an exigency 7 exception to justify a warrantless entry). Accordingly, regardless of whether an officer could 8 reasonably believe that pursuit of the suspected misdemeanants onto a porch was constitutional, 9 because no officer could reasonably believe that the manner of Officer Pollard’s search here 10 was reasonable, Defendants have failed to show they are entitled to qualified immunity.

IV. CONCLUSION

12 IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Plaintiffs’ Motion to Reconsider (ECF No. 112) is 13 DENIED.

14 IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Defendants’ Motion for Summary Judgment (ECF
 15 No. 101) as it relates to the remaining claims not resolved by the Court’s previous Order (ECF 16 No. 107) is DENIED. Plaintiffs’ claims for Fourth Amendment violation due to use of 18 ⁴ The unreasonableness of Officer Pollard’s actions is further highlighted when those actions are considered in 19 the context of the policy behind the hot pursuit doctrine. The purpose of the exception is so “that a suspect may 20 not defeat an arrest which has been set in motion in a public place . . . by the expedient of escaping to a private 21 place.” United States v. Santana, 427 U.S. 38, 43 (1976); see also Smith v. Stoneburner, 716 F.3d 926, 931 (6th 22 Cir. 2013) (“The ‘pursuit’ begins when police start to arrest a suspect in a public place, the suspect flees and the 23 officers give chase.”). In other words, the hot pursuit exception exists to prevent individuals—like the one in 24 Stanton—from frustrating legitimate law enforcement efforts, such as arresting a suspect or preventing the 25 destruction of evidence, simply by moving into a private place. See George, 883 F.2d at 1412–15 (discussing in depth the need for exigency exceptions for warrantless house arrests because once suspects are aware of their imminent capture they may “in desperation discard or destroy incriminating evidence, search for avenues of escape, or resort to violence against the officers or, worse, against innocent bystanders,” but noting that such exigencies are not necessary in most cases where the suspects are unaware of police presence). Here, however, in taking the facts in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, the individuals being pursued by Officer Pollard were not attempting to evade arrest or destroy evidence by moving to a private location; they were fleeing for safety from unknown gunmen. Consequently, their actions in retreating to the porch were not an effort to frustrate law enforcement but were natural responses to the perceived attack of the unidentified officers.

1 excessive force, intentional or negligent infliction of emotional stress, assault and battery, and 2 negligence survive summary judgment.
